Addressing today’s most pressing problems requires diverse research teams that include actively involved community members. In this seminar, Dr. Jeni Cross will discuss her community engaged research and teaching to promote health, community development, and urban sustainability. She will discuss building diverse teams, community-based research in senior capstone courses, and the ethics of diversity and inclusion in engaged research. Following the presentation, she will host a conversational lunch and learn session. Lunch will be provided.